Windows 10 Redstone 4 Features After a long wait, Microsoft finally announced the release date of the Redstone 4. It will be a standalone Windows 10 standalone installation ISO and will be an upgrade for the previous Windows 10 version. This will be a major update that packs several interesting features with a fresh design and UI for Windows 10. First and foremost, this new release will not include any of the recent new features. Microsoft is preparing a significant overhaul of the entire operating system and the new features will be incorporated in the October 2018 update. The Redstone 4 is built on the Windows 10 19H1 update. This Windows 10 update is quite old at this point. It packs several interesting new features like notification center, Microsoft Edge, built-in version of Cortana, new Windows Store features, and so on. Windows 10 October 2018 Update Release The final version of Windows 10, code-named as Windows 10 October 2018 update, is currently in development. This update will be a standalone installation file and will include a lot of major and minor features. Microsoft has hinted that the new major feature will be the extension of the Windows Insider Program to the general public. The new features will be visible only to the Insider Program users and will be accessible only after the Windows Insider Program registration is completed.
